the webpages contained in the Condorcet set. We compare the performance of each of these three classifiers to that of the single-page classifier. We calculate the overall number of pages delivered by each of the classifiers as $$R_n = \frac{N_{\text{del}}(n)}{N_p(n)}$$

$$\quad \text{for } n \in \{1, 2, 3\}.$$
The values of  $R_n$  are shown in Fig. [\[fig:del\]](#). These values are computed from the number of webpages left undelivered by each rule at the end of the three stages of delivering the webpages. We then calculate the relative error between the number of delivered webpages  $N_d$  and the number of pages that should be delivered  $N_{\text{del}}$ :
$$\text{ratio-del}$$

$$\text{relative error}(n) = \frac{|N_d - N_{\text{del}}|}{N_{\text{del}}} \quad \text{for } n \in \{1, 2, 3\}.$$
 For each rule we find the smallest relative error over all of the webpages. The values of these relative errors are shown in Fig. [fig:del-del]. The smallest error achieved by rule R1 is  $\frac{|N_d - N_{\text{del}}|}{N_{\text{del}}} = 0.00019$  over all pages. This error value is achieved over a minuscule fraction of the total webpages examined. Over all of the webpages examined, the difference between the number of pages left undelivered by R1 and those delivered by the other rules is nearly zero, and
