This commentary is a personal response to the recent publications in the AIDS Research and Human Retroviruses journal. Its aim is to outline what I consider are the most significant and controversial topics in the research on HIV infection and cancer. The author suggests that the demonstration of a relationship between treatment with highly active antiretroviral therapy (HAART) and development of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma may require consideration of the pattern of tumour progression, rather than a simplistic interpretation of the data in terms of risk of tumour. The author looks at a number of the issues relating to the heterogeneity of the population in AIDS clinics and emphasizes the need to consider the information provided by clinical trials and cohort studies with regard to the social, cultural and ethical implications of findings. A U.S. appeals court has turned away a government request to overturn a ruling that bars electronic eavesdropping on a phone call between drug kingpin Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman and two female associates on a call between the two that occurred 82138339de
