Short Description: Check your cool new skin Get it now Learn how to use it If you don't like it, send it back Or steal it Screenshots: XSense is a malicious program that has been spreading like wildfire through email attachments, especially spam ones, for the last couple of months. By launching as a friendly-looking attachment, XSense has been able to gain the attention of unsuspecting victims, who have then unwittingly unleashed their viruses, Trojans and spam on their computer systems. The current infections The first victims of this new trend include tens of thousands of IT professionals, mostly in Spain and Italy, according to AlienVault's researchers, who estimate that the virus has affected between 3,000 and 5,000 computer users in Italy and between 10,000 and 12,000 computer users in Spain, adding that it has also affected hundreds of computers in other European countries. XSense actually uses two techniques to get inside infected computers. The first one is done through a Web injection technique that allows it to download a potentially unwanted program that is then automatically executed. The second one is called "pre-infection" and consists of a Trojan that launches a massive attack on the victim's system, in order to deliver the virus. The infection XSense collects information about its victims through the screen resolution and IP addresses, and also through the browser's user-agent string, which reveals the computer's operating system and the browser used to access the website from where the virus reached the victim. The malicious software also collects other information, which will be used to target future attacks. "In some cases we have observed that XSense (not always at the same time) also seeks to collect information about the infected computer, such as the MAC address of the network card, the model and serial numbers of the computer, the laptop battery capacity, and the duration and dates of the use of the system," the experts warn. In addition to the commonly used communication techniques, XSense has adopted a stealthy anti-virus engine. Perforce is one of the most widely adopted distributed source control management systems used in the process of creating a product or a service. This software is responsible for assigning a small piece of code to a project and for releasing the final product to users. In that way, it will be much easier to identify changes made to a project, enabling teams to be responsible for them and also helping the customers to find out whether a particular piece of software has been modified for them. Perforce supports many different languages, including C++, C#, Java, Perl and other. There are cases when the development team needs to compile a piece of software on different platforms. This is when P4Thumb comes into action. This specialized tool for Perforce enables you to extract the images stored on the server. The tool is not only limited to the usage of Perforce. It is compatible with a wide range of image formats and can work with everything that comes under the term of an image. The most common are BMP, JPEG, PNG and GIF. It can also work with Adobe Photoshop, Maya and 3DS Max graphic files. Features: Extracts images from Perforce repository Resize the images to different sizes Batch file processing Image archives support SQLite support Works with 32 and 64 bit platform Very fast and light in use To sum up, P4Thumb is a useful server software program, especially since it is a server management utility.
