Does Google store your keywords in a cookie? How can you protect your identity when using the Google search engine? Use the Google-Zapper to learn and protect yourself. The Google-Zapper is a Chrome extension that will help you stay anonymous while using the Google search engine. When you do a Google search, a unique identifier is stored in a cookie on your PC. This cookie allows Google to keep track of your searches and display them to you in a Google search box. When you are logged into your Google account, Google can keep track of your web browser and the sites you visit. They can use this information to test Google's new features and compile reports on their usage. In the future, it is possible that they will use this information to sell the content you search for, track the sites you visit, or share the information with other companies. If you do not want to lose your attention data, do not use your Google account to log into the Google search engine. To log into the Google search engine anonymously, use a different browser. If you do not want to lose your attention data, use a different browser. If you are already logged in, use G-Zapper to block the cookie. If you are not logged in, you can start with this procedure: 1. Add the Google-Zapper extension to your Chrome web browser. The download button is at the bottom of the extension. 2. Click the google.com URL that opens in your browser and log into your Google account, if you have not already done so. 3. Click the Google search link at the top right of the Google search box. 4. From here, Google will display the search box you are logged into, with your attention data in it. 5. In your browser's Extensions manager, uninstall the Google-Zapper extension. To learn more about protecting your attention data, visit or The G-Zapper download will open in a new tab. To block the Google search cookie and start a new session, click the "Delete" button to the right of the G-Zapper icon. G-Zapper is a software utility that deletes the Google search cookie, which is an automatically generated record of your searches and is used by Google to compile reports on your online activities. This cookie allows them to track your Google searches and keywords, which they may share with others. How to Remove G-Zapper from your computer: 1. Click on the Start button and then click on the Run option. 2. Type in rundll32.exe and click OK. 3. A dialog box will appear where you can choose to execute the command. 4. Click on the OK button. 5. You will now have to restart your computer. 6. After a successful restart, you will need to go to www.google.com and remove the cookie. 7. If you want to do this on a regular basis, repeat steps 2-6. Tips: You may be able to simply choose to stop the application from running each time you restart your computer. But it is safer to remove the rundll32.exe file. The Food and Drug Administration is now accepting comments on a proposal to ban high-salt, high-fat junk food. The American Heart Association this month issued recommendations for eating less salt and sugar, but the federal government hasn't decided whether to follow their advice or follow its own by capping the amount of salt that's added to packaged and restaurant foods. The American Heart Association, a public-health advocacy organization based in New York, wants the federal government to limit the amount of salt added to foods by specifying the maximum amount of sodium per serving. The association also wants the government to ban the use of trans fats — primarily found in packaged foods — in the U.S. The recommendations are the result of a scientific review of the latest scientific evidence about the influence of dietary factors on heart health. They're part of a larger advisory to the public that includes the American College of Cardiology, the American Diabetes Association and the American Medical Association. In the dietary recommendations, the heart association acknowledges that "no one food, drink, or nutrient dominates as the main cause of heart disease." But it says the review shows "a critical need for clear dietary guidelines that address the totality of the evidence and offer practical recommendations for a healthy diet." The association makes a series of recommendations, including one to limit the sodium in packaged foods and restaurant meals to less than 2,300 milligrams — half the sodium consumed daily by the general population — and one to eliminate trans fats from processed foods. The heart association said in a statement that current national guidelines, which are set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, are "fragmented and inconsistent, often lacking a scientific foundation and
