[Immunological cross-reactions among different serotypes of morbilliviruses (in the general and specific aspects)]. Morbilliviruses usually belong to the family Paramyxoviridae. Unlike other viruses of the same family, they have cytoplasmic inclusion bodies in the cell. At present more than 20 serotypes of these viruses are known. Morbillivirus are supposed to have many biological properties in common: they are all agents of contagious diseases (of lamb or sheep); they have molecular weight of about $12-26 \times 10^6$ daltons; they cause, especially, lymphadenitis and interstitial pneumonia; viruses are inactivated on heating them; they have certain cross-immunity between each other; their particles bind antibodies of their own serotype and also neutralize them. On the other hand, there are also certain serotype-specific properties of each virus: for example, the former are susceptible to the immune serum of their own serotype and, on the contrary, they are insensitive to anti-recombinant measles (recMv) serum. Besides, they have the ability to substitute for each other. In this paper, the influence of serotype on the individual characteristics of morbilliviruses and the characteristics of cross-immunity are discussed. Lara Martinez, a spokeswoman for the commission, declined to comment. Facebook is seeking to buy WhatsApp for \$19 billion, a deal that would make it the biggest technology company ever to purchase a messaging app. It represents a big bet on the future of communication, particularly in Europe, as users decline
