Previously, we have shown that infusion of endotoxin (ET) evokes a disseminated intravascular coagulation (DIC) syndrome with increased tissue factor (TF) production and tissue factor pathway inhibitor (TFPI) activity in association with decreased thrombomodulin (TM) production. To clarify the etiological role of cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2) derived prostaglandins in this coagulation-fibrinolytic imbalance, rats were made deficient in COX-2 activity by the administration of indomethacin (I, n=10) or celecoxib (C, n=10), 2 selective COX-2 inhibitors, as well as ET.
