Crystal structure of a dimer-tetramer interface of a heterodimeric protein. The adenovirus 2 major membrane protein is composed of two identical subunits, H and L, that form a heterodimer that is essential for viral gene expression. The dimeric H and L subunits are heterodimerized by an intersubunit disulfide-bond, and the N terminus of L is tethered by an intersubunit disulfide to its C terminus. Mutational analysis of the epitopes for the neutralizing antibody G3 has revealed specific residues on the surface of a C-terminal alpha helix that are critical for the maturation of the precursor adenovirus hexon trimer. Using G3 and other neutralizing antibodies as probes, we have identified a cluster of positively charged surface residues on the side of L (residues 595-607) that are implicated in heterodimerization. This region forms an integral part of the only intersubunit contact interface between the two subunits that is critical for the interaction of L and H. We have also expressed, in Escherichia coli and in insect cells, the subunits of adenovirus 2 and used a combination of mutational analysis and comparative protein crystallography to determine the crystal structure of L(595-607) peptide. The alpha helical peptide adopts a crystal structure similar to that of the small helix of the G3 epitope, indicating that the G3 epitope and the L(595-607) peptide could bind to the same dimer interface of adenovirus 2. The L(595-607) peptide forms a trimer, in which the three monomers, which are the repeating unit of the crystal, are related by crystallographic three-fold axes. Each monomer contains a short amphipathic alpha helix that associates with the neighboring monomer at a dimer-tetramer interface.

Increased serum levels of interleukin-6 are associated with an increased risk of sporadic Alzheimer disease. To investigate whether serum levels of interleukin (IL)-6 are elevated in Alzheimer disease (AD), an inflammatory condition with a neuropathological signature similar to that of AD. The authors studied 36 patients with probable AD and 27 patients with a diagnosis of mild cognitive impairment. The AD patients had a median Mini Mental State Examination score of 23 and interquartile range of 20 to 26.5, and the controls a score of 28 and interquartile range of 27 to 29.5. At the time of blood withdrawal, the AD patients were not receiving treatment with any disease-modifying agents. The highest serum level of IL-6 was detected in AD patients with vascular dementia (pAbstract This presentation presents the results of 18 years of cosmic ray research, taking data from the CORSIKA simulation package. High-energy neutron records from the Haungsfors neutron detector have been used for the first time to study the neutron component of muon production in proton-proton and proton-nucleus interactions. The results from the folded array of the cosmic ray muon telescope, which should also give a neutron production spectrum, are shown. Footnotes 1 No abstract available. 2 We applied the threefold procedure to check data quality. The first stage is the instrumental calibration. The second stage is the cross-check of selected events by a method combining the data of more than one detector. And the last stage is the examination of the consistency between the results from two independent reconstruction methods. 3 These errors are estimated in advance for each event. 4 This parameter has been modified since the ICRC 1999. 5 The superposition epoch is introduced when two muons merge in a shower. 6 The reconstruction algorithm is independent of the EAS simulation package used. 7 For the hadronic component we used the QGSJET-II
