
years old, Harry Kane seems permanently thwarted. His greatest weakness is that he always wants more than his level warrants. Still, despite topping the goalscoring charts since November 2011, his eye for the net remains outstanding, and he continues to light up the Premier League's scoreboards. Tottenham's talisman can still be relied on to race in at the death, but this season he has taken to doing so from a distance. Eden Hazard and Robert Lewandowski have each scored more goals in 2016/17 than Kane, a player who tends to produce when it matters most. His only major concern thus far this season has been that his side have occasionally needed a goal or two — especially after the international break — to really stick the boot in the opposition back into the Old Firm. While Kane's importance has never been in question, the reason he is so synonymous with Tottenham at the moment is that he has carried them so far this season. The tall centre-forward has produced four double-figure hauls in the Premier League this season, with six goals in total the most he has ever scored in a single league campaign. He has been one of the best players on the pitch this season, and when the rest of the world is praying for the Blues and the Red Devils to make history — for a 54th time and 69th time, respectively — Kane is leading a race against time to claim the biggest three points of the season. “My aim is to be the best that I can be,” he said. 0cc13bf012
