A case of massive peritonitis and cardiac tamponade due to perforated gastric ulcer resulting from necrotic change of the gastric mucosa with caustic damage after conservative treatment is reported. Chest x-ray and computed tomography revealed massive pericardial effusion and revealed huge, dense gas between lung and pericardium. The patient underwent percutaneous drainage of pericardial effusion with a 10F pigtail catheter. After percutaneous drainage, the clinical course was good. The rapid relief of the clinical symptoms and the improvement of the gas levels in chest x-ray and computed tomography were confirmed. No complications occurred during the percutaneous drainage. In this case, percutaneous drainage was useful for treating massive peritonitis and cardiac tamponade.
